

78th Annual Meeting of
The West Texas Historical Association

March 30-31, 2001

Midwestern State University
Wichita Falls, Texas

In 1876 M. W. Seeley mapped out Wichita Falls on a tract of land near the Wichita River. The site was named for a five-foot waterfall that subsequently washed away. Seeley envisioned prosperity from steamboats on the river and warehouses laden with cotton. Wichita Falls did grow to become a transportation and supply center for Northwest Texas and southern Oklahoma, but it was railroads and oil that made this happen.

Shortly after the turn of the century oil was discovered outside the city, in Clay County, and by 1913 the North Texas fields were producing forty-six percent of all the oil in Texas. Refineries began to appear in Wichita Falls, and by 1915 there were nine refineries and forty-seven factories within the city. The boom was on!

Refinery activity was at an all-time low in 1962 when the city's leaders moved to diversify the economy by attracting other types of industry. The economic base shifted to manufacturing and commercial activity, Sheppard Air Force Base, and county government.

The doors of Wichita Falls Junior College opened in September, 1922. Operated by the Wichita Falls ISD, it was the second municipal junior college in Texas. In 1937 the junior college moved to a new campus on Taft Blvd. and opened under a new name, Hardin Junior College. It became Hardin College in 1946 when junior and senior years were added. In 1950 the school became Midwestern University and post-graduate degrees were offered. The last name change, to Midwestern State University, came in 1975.

One of the largest tornadoes on record hit Wichita Falls on April 10, 1979. The storm destroyed more than twenty percent of the dwellings in town and damaged many commercial buildings, however, recovery was rapid and within three years most of the damage was repaired.

FROM WITHIN THE WALLS

An inside look at the antiques and artifacts from the National Ranching Heritage Center's historic houses

This unique exhibit is a compilation of antiques and artifacts from the historic structures at the NRHC. They are accompanied by history-based fictional journal entries. Together they tell of the hopes and dreams, struggles and victories of the lives of those who lived in the 18th through 20th centuries in the American West.

"... Joseph stands so erect as he shaves, despite his terrible grief that the Santa Fe Railroad's Amarillo to Lubbock line has bypassed Bartonsite by eight miles. It has gone east of us to Abernathy. Joseph says this will surely cause the downfall of our little town, so he will talk to the merchants about moving the mercantile, post office, lumberyard, hotel and school to Abernathy. We are to stay with the house here in Bartonsite. This was to be such a wonderful town, and our beautiful house the center of all social activity. Joseph is a proud man, and he has worked so hard for all that he has. We will be fine, though. I am sure of it."

*On exhibit through June 13, 2001
at the National Ranching Heritage Center*
